Literature Review

The UK Post-graduate & Doctorate Literature Review Writing Help

We just not provide writing assistance but also Tutoring

A dissertation literature review contributes 40 percent of weight. Hence, more effort should be taken to collect exhaustive up to date literature that has been published from various countries or conducted among different ethnic groups. Thus, a researcher needs to collect relevant literature, including empirical, historical, philosophical literature related to a problem stated. A review of available literature is an important part of any academic dissertation. However, such task is challenging as you need to review thoroughly any published research on relevant theoretical concepts or models on which you intend to base your dissertation. You should compare and contrast the views and conclusions of a wide range of authors and add your views. It should be a 'critical' review and not just a regurgitation of the literature.

Need to highlight the limitations or contentious aspects of particular studies you have read (for example, their theoretical underpinnings, research design or interpretation of findings) or identify gaps in the literature. The latter may provide a rationale for your study. The review of literature done in the way said above gives a meaningful result, and our writers strictly follow the services.

Further, organizing the dissertation literature review is another challenge, where you need to identify and discuss the key themes and contributions with which you are engaging. Some issues have received a great deal of attention from researchers. Others have received far less attention, perhaps because their origins are relatively recent or because they have simply been neglected. It, therefore, stands to reason that the number and quality of research studies that will be available to you will depend on your research topic. At the end of your dissertation literature review, explain what gaps in the literature you will try to address and/or which particular models/frameworks or ideas you will take forward to help structure your research.

In short, the research scholar needs to review the theory and the major research critically for the dissertation literature review that provides the immediate background of your problem and furnishes the uniqueness and importance of the present study with that of earlier published study (identification of research gaps). With the research gaps, a research framework has to be developed based on the available empirical literature for the dissertation literature to contribute significantly to frame the research.
